Filmmaker Steven Dunning to Visit Cal Poly Pomona May 4

Independent filmmaker and producer/writer/director/actor of feature film "Now Chinatown," Steven Dunning will visit the Cal Poly Pomona Campus Tuesday, May 4.

Dunning will be discussing his film on topics ranging from the production of films to the marketing of movies. The discussion will begin at 3 p.m. in the Bronco Student Center's Ursa Major Suite. The event is being sponsored by Associated Students, Inc. Bronco Events and Activities Team and Professor J. Swartz of the International Business and Marketing Department. Admission is free but seating is limited.

Dunning's film, released in 2002, is about a young girl who is sent to America to work to support her family in China. In grappling with her Chinese traditions, she struggles to become independent and make a difference as an immigrant. The film has received reviews by major media outlets such as the Hollywood Foreign Press and The Los Angeles Times. It has also garnered a number of awards such as Best Picture by the Long Island International Film Expo and Grand Jury Prize at the New York Independent Film Festival.

A native to Pennsylvania, Dunning has worked with large Hollywood production companies and television networks for over a decade. His career has catapulted from the low ranks of Hollywood to a successful independent filmmaker today with "Now Chinatown."

Preceding Tuesday's discussion, "Now Chinatown" will be shown for free on Monday, May 3 at 3 p.m.
